“We filed this lawsuit five years ago on behalf of our clients, who sought justice for the unauthorized taking of their valuable creation,” said Kahn. “It was truly a David versus Goliath struggle. While the path has been long and arduous, our clients are pleased to have finally received the justice they sought from a jury of their peers.”

The five-year-long lawsuit concluded today when the nine-member jury, hearing the case in federal court in Los Angeles, unanimously agreed that the defendants, Katy Perry, Capitol Records, Lukasz ‘Dr. Luke’ Gottwald and others, must pay a combined $2.78 million in damages.

On Monday, July 29, 2019, the jury found that “Dark Horse” improperly copied the 2008
